A Code For Professional Nurses

Professional nurses minister to the sick, assume responsibility for creating a physical, social, and spiritual environment which will be conducive to recovery, and stress the prevention of illness and promotion of health by teaching and example. They render health service to the individual, the family, and the community and co-ordinate their services with members of other health professions involved in specific situations.

Service to mankind is the primary function of nurses and the reason for the existence of the nursing profession. Need for nursing service is universal. Professional nursing service is therefore unrestricted by considerations of nationality, race, creed, or color.

Inherent in the code is the fundamental concept that the nurse subscribes to the democratic values to which our country is committed.

With reference to the following statements the profession recognizes that a professional code cannot cover in detail all the activities and relationships of nurses, some of which are conditioned by personal philosophies and beliefs.
